

The Daedalus Institute

The Daedalus Institute was formed, under the Daedalus Foundation, to permit and promote independent, high-quality research and study of issues that affect populations, especially those pertaining to humanitarian assistance, medicine, public health, nutrition, water, housing, poverty, and related social matters.

The role of the Institute is to provide an objective, non-partisan platform for the study of population-related issues and, based upon the results, to make innovative, practical, action-oriented, and achievable recommendations.

Daedalus' intent is to encourage interested individuals, at all levels of their careers, to participate in the Institute's activities. Those activities will include publication of papers and other articles of interest to the Institute, its readers, and its sponsors.

Daedalus intends to maintain the highest level of intellectual and scholastic standards in its publications. Those publications are also intended to reflect a broad section of the scholastic spectrum and will not be limited. Anyone with an interest in publication, who is willing to meet the highest standards, is welcome. At the same time, we intend to establish the Institute as a very credible and trusted source for the objective examination of issues. Publication with the Institute's imprimatur should convey a strong sense of legitimacy, quality, trustworthiness, and scholastic excellence.

All submissions will be reviewed for appropriateness by the Institute's editorial review board and will be accepted, conditionally accepted, or rejected with recommendations. The criteria for acceptance are provided in the attached presentation.

If you have a publication that you would like to have considered by The Daedalus Institute, or would like a home for the administration of a grant or study, please contact the Institute at institute@thedaedalusfoundation.org.
